

BARN, CROPS, COWS LOST; NIGHT BLAZE AT PLUMSTEADVILLE

Value of Property and Cattle Destroyed Given at $14,000

AT ISAAC GROSS FARM

Sixteen Head of Holstein Cattle Escape Fire; Best
Wheat Crop Gone

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 8.—Loss by fire on a barn, together with contents of crops, some cattle and machinery, on the farm of Isaac Gross, one mile west of Plumsteadville, Saturday night before midnight, is estimated at $14,000.

The barn, one of the largest frame structures of its kind in upper Bucks County, 16 head of dairy cattle, one bull valued at $500, several hundred tons of hay, straw and wheat, a new tractor and an auto truck, were consumed in the conflagration.

Cause of the fire is undetermined as yet. The affair is being investigated by County Fire Marshal William L.
Stackhouse, Hulmeville.

It was between 11 and 12 o'clock, when unusual sounds were heard from the direction of the barn by Mr. and Mrs. Gross. Arising they saw the upper part of the structure in flames.

Rushing to the building Mr. Gross was able to save two horses and two automobiles. Ten head of dairy cattle were in a place of safety under a shed and six others had broken loose from the flaming structure, thus making sixteen that were saved. The six that escaped were slightly burned.

A building used for storing straw, and a wagon house in the path of the flames were also destroyed. Mr.
Gross states that this year saw for him one of the best wheat crops during the many years he has been farming. The entire lot was lost.

The owner of the barn and cattle is a member of the Bucks County Holstein Association, being a breeder of Holstein cattle.

Fire companies from Plumsteadville, Doylestown and Dublin concentrated on saving other outbuildings and the house. The fire had gained such headway when discovered that little could be done to save the barn or its contents.

ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE

New Passenger Electric Locomotive—The Pennsylvania Railroad is daily making experiments with this type of engine, with the hope it will eventually replace the steam locomotive on the New York-to-Washington line. One engine, or "unit," requires 11,000 volts to operate and can pull a train of eight cars.

EXPERIMENT WITH FOUR LOCOMOTIVES OF ELECTRIC TYPE

Carry Work On in Conjunction with Regular Steam Engines

REQUIRE 11,000 VOLTS

Pennsylvania Railroad Hopes
To Add to Group
Very Soon

Four passenger electric locomotives of a new type are being daily experimented with by the Pennsylvania Railroad, which type the company hopes will eventually replace the present steam locomotive on the New York-Washington line.

The electrification project on this section is now well underway, and these four locomotives are being used plying between Wilmington and Trenton. This area is now being served each day on regular express trains by the electrified system which is partially completed.

It is the hope of the Pennsylvania Company to soon put into operation several more of this type of locomotive during the next few months.

In line with the statement of General W. W. Atterbury, president of the rail road, officials predict that two and one half years from now 240 electric locomotives will be used on the New York to Washington line, replacing the present steam locomotives.

At present experimentation work is being carried on in conjunction with the use of regular steam engines. At Wilmington, the southern end of the present electrified system, regular express trains, including their locomotives are hatched on to the electric locomotives twice daily.

One engine of this type, or "unit," as it is referred to, requiring 11,000 volts to operate, has the power to pull a train of eight cars. Trains composed of more than eight cars are usually allotted two units.

In case of the lack of two units (two or three of them are sometimes in the shop for adjustment) the steam locomotive furnishes the power to start the train, and once under way the pulling responsibility is placed entirely upon the electric engine.

At Trenton, the northern end of the electrified system, the electric locomotive is disconnected and the train proceeds to New York under power furnished by the steam locomotive.
The electric engine is then used on a southbound train.

Imagine a gleaming black monster, looking like a cross-section between part of a steam locomotive and a highly exaggerated trolley car. Eliminate the smoke and steam, the soot, and the dirt attendant to the operation of the present type of locomotive. Substitute endless miles of wires and a comparatively simple set of gadgets controlling the far from simple set of highly complicated machinery, and you will have an idea of what the Pennsylvania Railroad hopes soon to make part of its system.

Operation of an electric engine is quite simple. A turn of the valve here, a switch there, and the huge steel-axle is at the control of the engineer, who may operate it at ninety or more miles an hour and is empowered to stop it with the least possible jarring through the application of air brakes. No dirt. No soot.
No water nor fire. As simple as operating one's automobile, it seems.

During a recent test run from Wilmington to Philadelphia, a locomotive of this type, pulling an eleven-car train, including a huge steam locomotive, developed a speed of 69.9 miles an hour.

"Greater flexibility," and "smoother handling" are some of the features of the electric engine, it is explained.
When the project of installing the engines is completed, the Pennsylvania Railroad will have spent $100,000,000.
It is expected that the operating time to be used in covering the 225 miles of tracks between New York and Washington will be shortened from

THREE R'S AND A FOURTH

Readin', 'rulin' and 'ridinetic' have their forces marshaled for a new educational campaign. Hundreds of pupils will go into the classrooms, some of them for the first time but most of them to resume courses of study that have been interrupted by the summer vacation. Some will go back reluctantly, others will take up school routine perfunctorily as one of the little annoyances of life and a few will take up the broken thread of culture with as much enthusiasm as could be expected under the circumstances. How wonderful a day it would be if all pupils could see it as they will see it in retrospect a few years hence, when sentiment as well as the practical side of life will bring a realization of the full meaning of the words of the old song about "school days, school days, dear old golden rule days."

That is a song for the mature and it should have the effect of reminding them of the fourth "R" in education, responsibility. It is likely that few persons capable of self-appraisal do not feel they neglected their opportunities for education when they were going to school. Most of them will blame themselves for what they have missed and they will be right. If they are wise they will say to themselves that they also will be responsible for a large part of what their children will miss if they are not awake to the extent that the return of school days involves them in the matter of duty.

The character of a child is formed by itself, its associates and its environment. Its deviations are the result of impulse, inclination and direction. The old saying—"As the twig is bent the tree is inclined"—holds good now and forever. The slightest causes have their effect on character and the accumulation of them, for good or bad, form an important sum in the life of any person. A boy doesn't become a rowdy or a hoodlum spontaneously but by degrees, nor does a little savage become acceptable company for others except through training and reformation.

That is what constitutes the burden of responsibility of parents in school days. Too often they thank heaven for the end of vacation in the mistaken idea that the school teacher will take their children in hand and make little gentlemen and ladies out of them without any assistance from the home. There is more to home work than just the preparation of lessons, and wise parents realize this. If more of them did they would be laying up a smaller quantity of future trouble for themselves than many are doing.

If Jimmy Walker gets homesick for Wall Street, he can always wander into one of those mudst colonies.

In Utopia the rents are just as high as here, but the tenant acquires title to the property after he has paid for it seven times.

A game of baseball isn't a social event. The spectators are just milk-run people who don't wave pennants and get drunk.

Side Lights in The News of World Capitals

WASHINGTON

By George R. Holmes

(U. S. Staff Correspondent)
WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The great mystery of Washington has been for months and continues to be:

"Who will control the 72nd Congress?"

There isn't any answer—yet.

Each time a member dies apprehensive party leaders, cabinet officers, White House secretaries, committee clerks, newspaper correspondents, all get out their pencils and start figuring. They cover recs of paper with their figures, argue endlessly, and in the end have little for their pains except a collection of ifs, ands and buts.

Usually before their calculations are dry another member has gone on to whatever Elysian fields are reserved for departed Congressmen and the figuring has to be done all over again. And so on, ad infinitum.

An inscrutable Providence and the cantankerous notions of perhaps 20 members will ultimately solve the puzzle of control. Guessing about the whims of Fate is idle business. Guessing about the whims of a score of Congressmen where their ambitions, their prejudices, their likes and dislikes are concerned, is even more idle.

Perhaps the most completely unpredictable thing in Washington today is this question of control of the new Congress.

As developments occur, membership, the control shifts like some erratic finger, pointing first to the Republicans, then to the Democrats.

When the 72nd Congress was elected last November, the Republicans emerged with a majority of one in the Senate, and two in the House.

Since the election there have been eight deaths among the House membership, but a whimsical Fate has maintained that equal division, even in death. Four Republicans and four Democrats have died. The partisan line-up thus remains as it was last November. In the elections of this coming November to fill the vacancies the expectation is that Republicans will be elected to Republican vacancies, and Democrats elected to Democratic vacancies. The districts concerned figure that way.

Thus the chances appear excellent that when the roll is called in the House next Dec. 7th, the line-up will be as it was when the polls closed a year ago. A rather remarkable thing considering there were eight deaths.

As good a guess as any at the present time is that the Republicans will organize the Senate and the Democrats will be able to organize the House.

Democratic leaders privately do not care much about organizing the Senate. It entails considerable responsibility that they would just as soon see the Republicans shoulder. The Democrats can control the upper chamber anyway, in coalition with the dozen or so Republican insurgents. They would rather control and leave the responsibility of organization on the shoulders of the administration Republicans.

The Democrats, however, feel differently about the House. They really want to organize that body, and they stand an excellent chance of doing so.

Time after time in recent years the Democratic-Progressive majority in the Senate has been victorious, only to see their victory swept away by the machine-run Republican house, under control of a little handful of hard-boiled and conservative leaders. They have frothed, but they have lost.

Now the Democrats see their opportunity. The one man who probably could have assured continued Republican organization, the late and very popular Nick Longworth, is gone.

The light little Republican clique, of which Nick was one, which ran the House with an iron hand is broken. Snell, of New York, and Tilson, of Connecticut, the other members of the clique, are rival candidates for the Speakership. Their respective friends are active and somewhat estranged. There appears on the Republican side not one outstanding personality who can rally the boys around the party standard. There are jealousies and animosities galore among the Republicans.

The Democrats, on the other hand, are fairly cohesive. No one questions the leadership of Jack Garner of Texas. Like Longworth, whose good friend he was, Garner has that faculty of making friends. He is able, popular, and a resourceful fighter. He has as many friends on the Republican side as Nick had on the Democratic side—and the number is not inconsiderable.

For years, the House progressives and insurgents have been ridden over rather ruthlessly by the hard-boiled Republican leadership. Now is their chance to pay the score and do a little profitable trading for themselves in the way of committee assignments, recognition, etc.

The Republican paper majority in the House is two. There are twenty nominal Republicans from Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, New York, Pennsylvania and Tennessee, who would just as soon see a Democratic speaker as a Republican speaker. Moreover, many of them are personally indebted to Jack Garner for favors done them when they met rebuff from their own party leaders in the past.

It will be an interesting, acrimonious, and open fight, with political possibilities of a most incalculable nature.

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 30.—Unconventional pictures have hit solidly with film audiences this year.

Taking courage, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has bought Upton Sinclair's book, "The Wet Parade," and will make it into a big production in the fall.

Though leaning towards propaganda, Sinclair never fails to write of provocative issues. And, apparently, this is the type of story the public will pay its money to see. Warner sensed it first, and have cashed in tremendously on "Little Caesar," "The Public Enemy" and "The Star Witness."

Other companies were sure to follow. You may look to see a marked journalistic tendency in next year's pictures.

BULLETIN

Hot news flashes from Hollywood:

Due to continued illness, Carole Lombard is out of the cast of "The Greeks Had a Word for It." Director Lowell Sherman and Samuel Goldwyn are conferring on a successor.

Carole rehearsed to day, and worked a little less than a week before the camera. Nancy Carroll's argument with Paramount is settled. She will play the feminine lead in Ernst Lubitsch's new picture, "The Man I Killed."

"Too Censorable" is the verdict of Paramount officials on Emile Zola's "Nana." Instead, Marlene Dietrich will star in "Shanghai Express," a melodrama of the China coast by Harry Hervey, author of "Congal." Anna May Wong may appear in the picture.

THE WET BLANKET.
A certain Hollywood producer is dreading by scenarioists because of his chilling reaction to stories. As one writer expresses it: "You and daughter, Miss Mary Espenship, of North Radcliffe street, spent the week-end at Seaside, N. J.

Miss Marion Wright, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wright, of 710 Pine street, spent last week in Ocean City, N. J., with relatives.

Mrs. John Dugan and her daughter, Mrs. T. J. Hoffman, of 711 Pine street, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. William Griffiths, of Garden street, spent Wednesday in Lincoln Gardens, as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. Diesel.

Mrs. H. Doyle Webb, of Radcliffe street, spent several days last week in New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. David Norman and son, Arnold, of Mill street, spent the week-end and Monday in New Haven, Conn., where they visited relatives.

go in full of sentiment and come out full of sediment."

LATEST GOSSIP

The decision of Howard Hughes to abandon "Queer People" will not affect Universal's intention to produce "Once in a Lifetime." ... Leo McCarey is said to have received in the neighborhood of $50,000 as a settlement on his contract to direct the Hughes film.

Low Ayres will take a six weeks' vacation before making "Gallows" for Universal. The young star has made nine pictures without a rest since he was signed for "All Quiet on the Western Front." He finished "Heaven on Earth" one midnight and went into "The Spirit of Notre Dame" the next morning. ... Lupe Velez keeps a scrap-book on Creta Garbo. She tells me that if she met the Swedish actress she probably would be struck dumb. And that, you have my word for it, would verge on the miraculous.

ISN'T IT THE TRUTH?

Following the success of James Dunn in "Bad Girl," the Fox Studio is sending a bulletin emblazoned in red screeched letters: "The Nation Is Dunn Conscious."

Whereupon Dave Hillman writes me across the face of a clothing bill: "They Should Tell Us!"

SOCIETY WELL LOST

A few days' work in a film troupe on location in Tampa, Florida, changed Ruth Hall's plans for her future.

Forsaking an assured position in local society, she came out here, bucked the extra racket and eventually got a Warner contract. Her first break, as told in these columns, was the lead opposite Joe E. Brown in "Local Boy Makes Good."

Continuing successful, she now will play the ingenue lead in the Marilyn Miller film "He, Mi+ Love."

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE by ANTHONY ABBOT

Copyright by Conix, Friede, Inc. — Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Geraldine Foster was hacked to death in a house on Peddler's Road, leased by her employer, Dr. Maskell, and her nude body buried in a grave filled with tannic acid. Two women were seen leaving the doctor's office carrying bottles similar to those found near the grave. Mrs. Morgan, a neighbor, substantiates the doctor's statement that he was with her daughter, Doris, the day of the disappearance. Maskell claims there was a strange woman outside his office when he returned. Other suspects are Harry Armstrong, Geraldine's former fiancé, and her brother, Bruce, who will receive her inheritance. Bruce is an adopted son whose father was a murderer. Dr. Maskell reports to Police Commissioner Thatcher that Geraldine phoned him on January 5, ten days after her disappearance requesting that he meet her, but failed to appear. The autopsy shows she was killed on December 24, and her body preserved by the acid to make it appear that death occurred within 48 hours. Maskell, accused, sticks to his story. His brother and sister-in-law, George and Natalie Maskell, call to see him, but are turned away.

CHAPTER XXVI

"N" said Thatcher Colt, suddenly breaking the silence, "my dear doctor, I have taken the liberty of making some arrangements for your morning."

"Yes, certainly," said Doctor Maskell, turning from the window with a deep sigh.

"There is another car downstairs, in which you will find some of your friends. We are going on a journey."

"Without breakfast?" asked the physician.

"I am afraid so," replied the Commissioner, while Dougherty laughed, shook hands with my chief and promised to see him later in the day. Then he and Hogan departed, leaving the next stage of the investigation in our hands.

"If you think that extra little torment will help in breaking my nerves," said the doctor, "let me disabuse your mind. I have eaten no breakfast, except hot water, in twenty years, and, as a doctor, staying up all night is no great strain on me."

We descended into the fresh air of the young morning. At dawn, there had been a sun, but already banks of rain-clouds were massing in the heavens; the air was damp and cold; it was the beginning, after an hour's interlude of an other spell of dismal and cheerless weather.

In front of 240 Centre Street a maroon-colored Auburn car was drawn up at the curb, with that strange little fellow Checkles sitting at the wheel.

An Important Witness

My chief explained to me, in an aside, that the Inspector and some of the men had been talking with Checkles. The best they could get out of him was that he was with the doctor all through Christmas Eve afternoon. Beside Checkles in the car, smiling a little wanly, and as pale as a moon at dawn, Doctor Maskell took his place. Then he looked back and in the rear seat, he saw a woman and a child. The mother, I recognized as Felise Morgan, and the little girl was Doris Morgan, the child living alibi. She was quite pretty. Later I learned that she was ten years old. Her golden hair and large blue eyes and colorful dress and hat gave her a rather spoiled and stagey air—one would expect her to grow up into a cinema star, if cinema stars ever do grow up. But what interested me most was the love and tenderness in Doctor Maskell's eyes when he looked at little Doris. I think the sight of her quite unmanned him. He caught her to him as she rose with a squeal of joy at sight of him, and she kissed him in lively, intimate and trusting fashion.

"Hello, Doris! Hello, Checkles," called the Commissioner, taking his place beside the child and motioning me to a folding seat in front of him.

"Good mornings and good nights and good fellows and good gods," said Checkles. His head bent over the wheel of the car, and he pushed the horn button with his long, peaked nose, so that the car cried out as if in fright at his behavior.

Doris laughed. "Isn't Checkles too funny for words?" she asked, with a grown-up glance at Thatcher Colt. "He always blows the horn with his nose."

The Commissioner nodded, as he drew a slip of paper from his pocket, and read off the names and addresses of the patients of Doctor Maskell, to whom, so the suspect declared, he and Doris and Checkles had delivered the prescription.

"All correct," said Maskell. Then we further delayed our start while the Commissioner talked earnestly with Doris. He told her she was a very important person, and that she could help the great City of New York, and she must try to remember everything she could. She promised with the most grown-up and gracious smile imaginable.

Retraced Steps

"You were with the doctor every part of the time on Christmas Eve?" asked Commissioner Colt.

"Yes, sir; every part," said Doris Morgan firmly.

"Now," continued Thatcher Colt, "according to my memorandum, you went first to an address on Patchin Place. Is that right?"

"Yes, certainly," replied the doctor in a hoarse voice. Colt gave Checkles his orders and immediately we started zigzagging up and across town, in the direction of Greenwich Village. Whenever it was necessary to blow the horn, I noticed, with extreme distaste, that Checkles bent forward and pushed the round black button with his nose. There was no conversation during that journey, until we reached the narrow impasse behind the Jefferson Market Court, where, for many years, artists and poets have lived in the little red brick houses, rejoicing in the tiny trees, the narrow sidewalks, and the general air of another century that hovers over the place.

"Doris," said Thatcher Colt, "do you remember anything about your last visit here?"

"Oh, yes," said the child. "We brought a parcel, done up in paper and ribbon, to an old lady who lives in that third house over there."

"Who delivered the package?"

"The doctor went to the door and rang the bell and the clerk came to the little door and he sent me up to deliver it."

"How long did that take?"

"Oh, not more than a second or so. The doctor told me I wasn't loiter, because we had so many other places to go. I was awfully tired by the time we got home."

As we started off again, Thatcher Colt began to question Mrs. Morgan.

"You were an intimate friend of Geraldine Foster?"

"Oh, no. Our apartment is over the doctor's office. Doris and Geraldine met in the halls. They became friendly. The doctor took fancy to Doris and soon we all got to know each other."

finished that twisting and trafficked itinerary. In and out of the crowded New York streets we drove, while Checkles pushed the horn button with his nose, and heaped maledictions on taxi drivers and pedestrians who tempted death under our wheels. From a broker in East Twelfth Street, to an actor who lived the Chelsea Hotel. Farther north we were slowly creeping on our journey, which was confined largely to the West Side, but by the time we had stopped in front of the Sherman Square Hotel, Doctor Maskell reminded us that it was just three o'clock on Christmas Eve afternoon that he had been there before.

He knew by the fact that he had inquired the time of the doorman, wondering if he would be able to complete the rest of his trips before it was time for Doris to be back in her home. The doorman knew the doctor, who often called to visit one patient, a retired merchant tailor who lived on the eighth floor of the hotel. When questioned, the doorman perfectly recalled Doctor Maskell asking the time and he further recollected that it was three o'clock.

As we drove past the barren Shakespeare Garden in Central Park, I had to tell myself that so far the doctor's alibi had been consistently sustained. Then, at the next place we stopped, a small hotel apartment house near Central Park, we came upon a surprising piece of information. The patient to whom Doctor Maskell had delivered a present there was a Mrs. Westock. She told the Commissioner that, on Christmas Eve, before the doctor reached her house, someone had called on her telephone and asked for the physician.

"It was a woman's voice," said Mrs. Westock. "She seemed to be very anxious for me to get word to him. The message she left was: 'Please come at once to Peddler's Road. Something terrible has happened.'"

"She did not leave any name?"

"No, sir. Nor her telephone number."

"Did you give the doctor the message?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did he say?"

"He looked surprised, but all he said was 'Thanks.'"

Shattered Alibi

This conversation took place in the Westock apartment, and naturally Doctor Maskell did not hear it, for he remained in the car with Detective Burke, guarding the whole party. Thatcher Colt did not tell the doctor about Mrs. Westock's story. Soon the car had crossed Fifth Avenue, continuing east until Park Avenue, where finally we stopped in front of a large apartment house.

"Oh," exclaimed Doris, "here is where I had the ice cream."

Thatcher Colt had his hand on the door, but at this remark, he settled back and looked gravely down at Doris. Watching Maskell, I saw that he did seem concerned.

"Where did you have ice cream, Doris?" asked the Commissioner, casually.

"Checkles and I had ice cream while Doctor Maskell delivered some presents by himself," answered Doris.

"Where?"

"Right there!"

The child pointed out of the car window to a confectioner's on the opposite corner.

"Did you have more than one plate of ice cream?" asked Thatcher Colt.

"Three! I had three!" cried Checkles gleefully, as he turned and looked at us over his shoulder.

"But Doris is a lady and took only one. She had to wait for me, though I had three."

WASHINGTON KNEW OF LAFAYETTE'S ESCAPE

Freedom Was Not for Long, and He Was Soon Returned to Austrian Stronghold

WERE GREAT FRIENDS

On September 6, patriotic Americans now planning for the celebration next year of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, should give thought to another historic figure intimately associated with George Washington in the struggle for Independence. The 6th of September marks the 174th anniversary of the birth of Lafayette, to whom all Americans are in debt for his ardent support of the cause of Liberty. The personal friendship of these two men, no less than their military association, forms one of the finest pages in the story of America.

In 1824, when Lafayette paid his last visit to the United States, he received at the hands of our people a reception that became one of the triumphs of history. Wherever he traveled over the country he was given tumultuous testimony of the affection and gratitude in which he was held. Since then, while his name is as familiar to every American schoolboy as that of any native-born patriot of the Revolution, the facts of his life have been more or less forgotten.

One colorful episode of his vivid career is not often remembered, and as the event occurred during Washington's lifetime and has to do with his undying interest in Lafayette's fortunes, it should be recalled to popular attention.

Lafayette, as a result of his activities during the French Revolution, which broke forth soon after the establishment of the United States Government, was for some years imprisoned in an Austrian military stronghold. President Washington did everything that he could, within the limits of diplomatic usage, to obtain the release of his friend and former military subordinate, but his efforts were unavailing. But since Lafayette was liberated in 1797 and lived to exchange letters with Washington, it is probable that his old Commander-in-Chief knew of the daring attempt of a young American officer to set Lafayette free.

When Lafayette and Baron de Kalb came to America to aid in the war for Independence, they landed at Winyaw, near Charleston, South Carolina. There they were entertained by the family of a patriot, Major Huger. The son of this soldier, who afterward became Colonel Francis Kinloch Huger, conceived for Lafayette one of those hero-worshipping affections which only a boy can know. Years later, long after America's successful war for freedom, and while Lafayette was still imprisoned in Austria, this Colonel Huger was in Europe engaged in study. There he fell in with a young German, a Dr. Bolman, another champion of liberty, who proposed to Huger an ambitious plan for Lafayette's deliverance.

The two young men proceeded to Olmutz, where Lafayette was detained, and set up a campaign to cultivate, first of all, the good will of Lafayette's personal jailer. When this worthy's suspicions had been allayed, the two fellows confided, through him, to furnish Lafayette with books to while away his hours of tedium. This practice having run on for some time without arousing misgivings in the jailer's mind, Huger and Bolman slipped through a book carefully annotated on the margins. These notations constituted a cipher message, and Lafayette was quick to detect that this particular volume contained more than met the eye. When he returned the book, it was with a note which said that he had read it "with marked attention" and was "charmed with its contents." The cipher, of course, laid out the plan for his escape.

The prison authorities were accustomed to permit Lafayette a certain amount of air and exercise outside the castle, usually in the form of a drive in a cabriolet, with a mounted guard in the rear and an armed soldier beside the driver. At times this drive continued to some distance from the castle walls, and Lafayette was even allowed to dismount and walk about with his guard. On the day planned for the escape, Lafayette was instructed to gain as great a distance as possible from the castle, while Huger and Bolman rode out from Olmutz with a third horse for Lafayette's use. This was accomplished, and at a signal the guard was overpowered, but just as Lafayette was about to mount the horse brought for him, the animal shied and ran away. Huger promptly insisted that Lafayette gallop away on the horse he himself had ridden, and although the alarm had been given, Lafayette succeeded in putting ten miles between himself and his pursuers and was well on his way to freedom.

Unfortunately he had not been made familiar with the country about Olmutz and, at a fork in the road, he took the wrong course and galloped straight into danger. Stopping to inquire his way, he was at once suspected as an escaping prisoner and turned over to a magistrate who soon learned who he was. The end of the affair, so far as concerned Lafayette, was his return to the castle and to more years of imprisonment before his final liberation.

The young American, Huger, a mere boy in his twenties, was soon enough taken and brought in chains before the authorities in Olmutz, who informed him that he stood to pay with his life as the penalty of his escape. In vain influential friends intervened to soften his fate, and for some time his case looked black. In the end it fell to the military commandant to deal with him, and this individual, Count Archo, turned out to have a soft heart. Huger was at length let off, on the lenient condition that he instantly leave the country, never to return.

If the Revolutionary historian, Alexander Garden, is a reliable authority, young Huger must have impressed the Austrian military veteran, for the old soldier, commenting on the younger man's reckless devotion to Lafayette, is reported to have said, "If ever I need a friend, I wish that friend may be an American."

George Washington, having failed in his own efforts to free Lafayette, did the next best thing. He characteristically deposited a substantial sum of money in an Amsterdam bank, for the use of Lafayette's impoverished wife. Not content with that, he kept Lafayette's son for a considerable time at Mount Vernon. As Lafayette, after his release, exchanged letters with his old Chief, Washington must certainly have learned of this attempt at the release of his friend, and so may have silently thanked the old Austrian commandant for his leniency toward the reckless young Huger.

Six Months to Pay the Bill

By HARRISON CARROLL.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 60.—Wise producers shift their plans as the wind blows. Consequently, Charles Rogers, head of RKO-Pathe, has arranged to give Helen Twelveteens a melodrama for her next starring picture.

It will be "The Second Shot," an original by Garret Fort, with a Central American and African background.

The story called "Breath of Promise," previously named for Helen, has been postponed. There also will be a change of directors, as E. H. Griffith doesn't go in for melodramas.

The potent voice of the exhibitors is responsible for the production shift. They are calling for another picture on the order of "Her Man." As RKO-Pathe didn't commit itself to any particular stories for its stars, the change can be made without risk of comebacks.

MAYBE HE PLAYS THE TUBA.
Take it from Larry Tibbett, "The Cuban" was hardly under way before Jimmy Durante had an address book reading like a Spanish dictionary.

LATEST GOSSIP.
Lupe Velez says she doesn't love Gary more, but that if he were in trouble she would sell her last possession to help him. Someone is flooding Hollywood with ten shilling chances on the Irish Free-State hospital sweepstake to be run in Manchester, England, Nov. 28. Mystery—who was the woman in white evening gown who smoked cigars all evening on the Roosevelt roof? Harriet Parsons is doing special publicity for Hal Roach. The critics here like Anna May Wong in "On the Spot." Met Douglas Fairbanks at this opening. He was getting a kick out of having several underworld big shots pointed out to him in the lobby. Edwin Justus Mayer, the playwright, hurried back to Los Angeles following the death of his baby son a few hours after his birth in a local hospital. The Mayers have one other son, 3 years old. Clark Gable is back in town looking thin from his week's illness.

STILL THE GREATEST.

Few of his Hollywood friends remembered the fifth anniversary of Rudolph Valentino's death. A wreath from Pola Negri was about the extent of the flowers sent from the film colony. Rudy's body still lies in the borrowed crypt of June Mathis. The proposed mausoleum never materialized.

No matter, he remains the greatest star of them all.

BROWNING BUSY.

His European vacation over, Tod Browning is busy on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot preparing a mystery story to feature Lionel Barrymore. It will be the first picture under his new contract.

In the old days, Browning was a familiar figure on the M.-G.-M. lot. He wrote and directed many of the Chaney vehicles and, later on, did "The Thirteenth Chair."

Before going to Europe, he went over to Universal to direct "Dracula."

DENNY CAST.

The third important role in "Private Lives" will be played by Reginald Denny. Norma Shearer will star in the film and Robert Montgomery plays opposite her. Jean Hersholt also will appear in the cast.

DID YOU KNOW

That Greta Garbo was a dancer in Sweden?

Lionel Barrymore.

Words can mean lots of things—but you can always trust your taste. If a cigarette tastes right, if it satisfies you right down to the ground, then it is right.

There are all kinds of tobaccos—some good, some not so good. And there's the Chesterfield kind—the best Turkish and the best Domestic that grows. Full-ripe, sun-cured, aged in Nature's thoroughgoing way—and as mild and smooth and sweet as sun-ripened fruit. Chesterfields taste right —because they are right. And something you can't taste—that's important too! The finest cigarette paper—so pure it burns without taste or odor!

And behind this unchanging good taste, all the resources of a great organization—men, money, science, experience. It takes them all to make a great cigarette, and they're all behind Chesterfield.

Your taste is dead right. Chesterfields do satisfy.

THREATENED—with a fate blacker than death!

Crazed with blood-flaming rum—those savage Kaffirs attacked! It will challenge your belief to read of the jungle horrors heaped upon this beautiful woman, who actually lived to tell her own true story in words so frank they terrify.

"If those degenerate Kaffirs had only killed me," this beautiful woman writes, "I would not today be tortured with telling you of that horrible jungle night."

"Now that I have the safety of a home in this greatest of all lands, it haunts me like a hideous nightmare that my husband and I were once driven from Natal by the ferocious Zulus. From there, we trekked toward the promised peace of Zoutspanberg. Through endless miles of dense, foul-smelling jungle swamps, we waged our fight for life—against lethal snakes, ravenous crocodiles and beasts, and the tsetse fly's death-fever."

"But death at the hands of any natural jungle peril would have been sweet wine compared to the bitter fate awaiting me in the land of the Kaffir savages. They stalked us for days, and every mile I could see fear—fear she simply isn't chic at all. For sleeves are plum full of interesting detail and constitute a large part of fashion interest on every new frock or costume.

At one of the designers white pleated puffs are worn over a tight-fitting black sleeve. Wide, deeply-set sleeves fall loosely and gather at the wrists to a band in almost Grecian manner. Sleeves of a velvet suit are trimmed at the shoulder with fur. Draped sleeves of flannel are thick at the elbow and tight at the wrist. Short sleeves attached to the waist at each side of the arm fall free from the shoulder in a draped effect.

Fringe makes the sleeves of a low model and breitschwanz fur forms the lower halves of the arm covering on "Tokio," an unusual formal afternoon gown of pinkish-orange crepe.

One designer likes the tight-fitting sleeve from wrist to elbow where there are pleasing ways of varying the fullness with puffs shirred in shoulder-pieces and wide elbow cuffs.

At another house sleeves are really arm-bands of roses between four and five inches wide on two pretty evening gowns.

Jeanne Lanvin is giving much thought to sleeves this season, with balloon effects around the elbows, puffs at dropped shoulders, and in general, a very medieval note to them all.

Extremely ingenious are the little puffed sleeves trimmed like the edge of the skirt with small box-pleats, on an afternoon dress in black crepe marocain with cream inlaid lace about the neck.

STAINLESS
Vicks VapoRub

Your Same Vicks...Only Color
Removed...Same Formula
Same Price

HERE'S real news! Science has found a way to remove the color from the world's most famous treatment for colds — without altering the time-tested formula a iota! It's your same Vicks—just all chance of stain gone! Why 26 Million Jars Are Used Yearly — For twenty-five years Vicks VapoRub has been the mothers' reliance — the family standby for cold troubles. Like nothing else Vicks acts externally—without the risks of "dosing"—direct to the affected area—by stimulation and inhalation—2 ways at once. In Golden Amber or Stainless White—Now your druggist has Vicks in the original amber or the new stainless white form—as you prefer it. It's the same dependable Vicks... same time-tested ingredients, compounded in the same exclusive Vicks way—at the same price.

VICKS NOW IN TWO FORMS — as you prefer it

For a generation an especially selected amber petrolatum has been used as the base of Vicks, because we found no white or "stainless" base of satisfactory melting point and viscosity that would permit the gradual, long-continued vaporizing action that is distinctive of Vicks.

Through the perfection of a process which removes the natural color, without otherwise affecting its properties, Vicks Chemists have at last made Vicks VapoRub possible in white, stainless form, for those who prefer it.
